FOREWORD

Health workers are professionals with a wide range of skills in provide quality health services and focus on health patient. In this era of globalization, health workers are required to provide excellent and quality health services (Kenda, C. et al., 2011). Health systems around the world are currently in crisis (Frenk et al., 2010). This condition causes the need for health services to be unfulfilled in certain areas. If this problem is not addressed immediately, it will become a hindrance key to achieving the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) (Noguchi, I., 2014).

To face the increasingly complex challenges of the needs and health issues, the first Institute of Medicine (IOM) conference recommends that all health education providers are required to encourage collaboration between health professionals in the health care team (Antonakis, J, 2012). Health academics have a role and responsibility to provide education and training for health students by team-based service competencies (Capella et al., 2010).

On, October 5-6, 2021, the Faculty Health of Science – Universitas Muhammadiyah Purwokerto, held the 2nd International Nursing and Health of Science activity with the topic of Inter Professional Education is to encourage and create collaborative practices and improve health outcomes, one or more different professionals must understand the role and function of their profession and understand the role of other health professions.
